

Martyn is probably the only high profile leader to have sung on an opera stage, performed laser surgery, hand-milked cows, danced in contemporary dance performances, and driven a tank. Since a young age, he has followed his instincts, and they have led him to all sorts of places he probably shouldn't have been: flying a US Air Force fighter-bomber flight simulator age 16 as work experience, advising leading surgeons on new techniques in microsurgery, consulting to leaders in global boardrooms who want to stimulate new ways of thinking and running organisations.

Martyn is an experienced leader of high profile disruptive change in organisations, working with individuals, teams and whole organisations. For 15 years, he has been director of Gadfly Consulting, a niche consultancy focused on innovative projects, and working with directors in global organisations to promote organisational change and creative leadership. He has lived and worked in six countries, and thrives on finding creative solutions to 'impossible' problems.